- Keep records of any out-of-pocket expenses you incur, such as costs for medication, household help, or transportation to seek treatment. It is difficult to obtain repayment for these expenses unless they are documented.
- Keep a dated record of how your problems impact your life. This will help us document how your injury has altered your life. Note pain you may be experiencing, physical or emotional limitations on activities that were once a part of your daily lifestyle.
- Be aware that the defendant may hire someone to investigate your personal activities to determine the nature and extent of your injuries. Such investigations can include surveillance, videotaping and conducting interviews with neighbors and co-workers.

Don't wait to see how the insurance company or employer will handle your case before consulting with an attorney. Delays usually work against you, the victim, and FOR the defendant. We've helped thousands of workers get the benefits they deserve. If you've been injured, call Putnam Lieb today at 1-800-225-4529.

individuals close doors to their recovery because of things they inadvertently say or do immediately after the accident.

- Don't discuss your case with anyone other than your attorney, your physician and your immediate family. Statements you make to others can be used against you later.
- Don't sign any claims or documents until you have discussed it with your attorney.
